Gospel: Matthew 22:34-40

The king in today's Gospel throws open the doors of his banquet hall with startling generosity. When the invited guests refuse to come, he sends his servants into the streets to gather everyone—good and bad alike. The feast that was meant for the privileged becomes a celebration for the outcast. This is the scandalous abundance of God's grace.

Yet the parable takes an unexpected turn. Among the gathered guests, one man appears without a wedding garment. His silence when questioned and his subsequent removal from the feast jar us. How can a king who invites anyone off the street then condemn someone for improper dress? The wedding garment represents something deeper than external appearance—it symbolizes our response to God's invitation. We cannot simply show up to the divine banquet on our own terms. Grace is free, but it asks something of us in return.

Saint Paul understood this paradox. In his letter to the Philippians, he speaks of learning contentment in every circumstance, of being fed by God's provision. Paul had accepted the invitation and allowed himself to be clothed in Christ. He knew both abundance and need, yet remained dressed in gratitude, sustained by the God who supplies every need.

The wedding garment, then, is the life of discipleship itself—the daily choice to put on Christ, to be transformed by mercy, to live in gratitude rather than presumption. God's invitation is genuinely universal, but it calls us to conversion, to allow ourselves to be clothed in love, humility, and service. The feast is prepared, the doors are open, and the King himself awaits our presence.

As you come to the table of the Eucharist this week, how will you clothe yourself in Christ? What response does God's generous invitation require of your heart today?

St. George Divine Mercy Cenacle

This Cenacle was formed about 10 years ago under the Study Guide of the Marian Fathers of the Immaculate Conception B.V.M. headquartered in Stockbridge, Massachusetts. We meet once a week on Thursday morning after daily Mass. This is a ministry of prayer, study (Sacred Scripture, the Catechism of the Catholic Church and St. Faustina Diary) and service to our community. We enjoy fellowship and deepening our Catholic faith with the knowledge of the Divine Mercy message. We share our struggles and joys in applying it to our daily life.
